PLEASE PASTE THE FINAL TEXT BELOW:

On 21 March 2013, Tanzania's ministry of tourism announced that it would reduce the Loliondo Game Controlled Area from 4,000 to 1,500 square kilometres.

The government stated in 2013 that the grabbing of 1,500 square kilometres bordering the Serengeti national park was necessary for wildlife conservation and the protection of water resources. It also stated that local herders were given 2,500 square kilometres of land for grazing.

Loliondo is home to at least 66,000 mostly nomadic Maasai pastoralists who own over 100,000 animals. Within the Game Controlled Area there are eight registered villages. These are Ololosokwan, Soitsambu, Oleipiri, Oleirien/ Maigaduru, Losoito, Maloni, Arash and Piyaya. The villages are recognized by the Land Act No. 5 of 1999 and the Local Government Act No. 7 of 1982. Even though the Director of Wildlife has the legal power to grant hunting permits, he does not have the legal mandate over the villages. The 21 March 2013 announcement prohibits farming and livestock grazing the in 1,500 square kilometres area.

The Maasai living in Loliondo originally come from the Serengeti. When the famous national park was established there in 1951, they were forcibly resettled in Loliondo. In 2009 more than 350 Maasai homes were set ablaze after Maasai refused to leave the area to make room for hunting activities. The conflict left 20,000 homeless.

The Emirati hunting company Ortello Business Corporation (OCB) has been operating in the Loliondo area since 1992. Its hunting permit has been renewed every five years since then. However, the permit did not remove the rights of the people to own, use and live in the legally established villages. With the establishment of the wildlife corridor the company OCB is given exclusive access to the 1,500 square kilometers area by the Tanzanian government. 30,000 Maasai herders will be evicted from their ancestral lands to make room for exclusive commercial hunting and tourism. Their traditional cattle-herding livelihood will be destroyed because they cannot let their cattle graze there in the dry season. The government's claim that the 1,500 square kilometers area has suffered from overgrazing is incorrect.

Society for Threatened Peoples calls on the Human Rights Council to urge the Government of Tanzania:

- to cease the grabbing of land belonging to the villages,
- to refrain from reducing the Loliondo Game Reserve from 4,000 square kilometres to 1,500 square kilometres.
- to protect the Maasai from being forcibly removed.
